From the CEO

Welcome to the Autumn edition of Connect.

On page 4 we explain the benefits of a diverse and inclusive service with a focus on our Nepalese team members. We know you enjoy reading about fellow clients, so it's a pleasure to introduce you to Kevin (page 9) and Lorraine (page 10). We bring you an update on the trial of a new activity kit (page 6) and explain how we can support you with your hearing (page 8). On page 12 we take a look at what our Social Action and Research Centre is working on in 2023.

Some of you might have heard that Anglicare is reducing our delivery of some disability services funded by the National Disability Insurance Scheme. We are working hard to make this transition as easy as possible for affected clients and family members.

Please rest assured that Anglicare's aged care service is continuing as usual. Our committed team is delighted to be delivering in-home services to older Tasmanians across the State.

With best wishes to you and your families this Easter and until next time,

Chris Jones, CEO

Ellen Nicholson, General Manager Aged Care Services

Hello everyone. I'm delighted to bring you the first issue of Connect for 2023.

I hope you find it full of interesting stories and information. Don't forget it's your newsletter, so if there's something in particular you'd like to hear about, tell a member of your care team and they will pass it on.

The next three months are busy for us.

We are currently preparing to implement a new client management and support system. This will assist us become more efficient in the way we schedule your services and support your care needs.

Our care workers will continue attending their nearest offices for quarterly training sessions on topics including recognising changes in client needs, the importance of equality and inclusion, and food and nutrition. It's a great opportunity for our staff to meet each other and share ideas about improving our service.

We have signed up 12 new clients to our digital inclusion project, which is wonderful. We look forward to seeing their skills and confidence grow over the next 12 months.

And lastly, a reminder about time windows. Time windows help us schedule your services. They represent a time period, either in the morning or in the afternoon, during which we provide your support. You share your time window with one other client. Our priority is to make your service as seamless as we can but sometimes delays are unavoidable. If your worker is running late we will endeavor to let you know. It always helps our scheduling team if you advise us as soon as possible if you have a one-off change to your routine. Don't hesitate to contact our team on 1800 466 300 if you have any questions or concerns.

I think that Autumn is Tasmania's loveliest season. Enjoy!

Ellen Nicholson, General Manager, Aged Care Services

A culture of caring

Tasmania's Nepalese community is expanding and we're delighted when its members choose to work with us.

The community numbers around 10,000 people in Hobart, 3,500 across the North and several hundred in the North West.

Community members use their skills across the aged care, hospitality, business, retail, and farming sectors, making them strong contributors to the Tasmanian economy.

Nepali has become the third most spoken language in the State, after English and Mandarin.

Community leaders have said that our weather and our hilly landscapes remind them of home, and they like our slower pace of life.

Dawa Sherpa recently joined Anglicare's Scheduling team. Prior to that, she worked with us as a Home Care Worker.

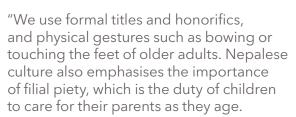

Dawa explains that in her culture there is a high value placed on the happiness of older people.

"We respect the elderly and honour their wisdom and experience," she said.

When we do things together, we learn from each other and this benefits everyone.

"From early childhood we're brought up to feel very connected with our grandparents. We also keep an eye out for any elderly person we see out in the community. For generations, we've supported and encouraged older people. It comes from inside," she said.

"We know that little things can make a big difference. We also love sharing our language and our food and our customs. We celebrate festivals like Dashain and Losar (New Year).

"When we do things together, we learn from each other and this benefits everyone," said Dawa.

Ellen Nicholson says it's clear that the personal values of our Nepalese team members provide a natural fit for the Anglicare values of Respect, Hope, Compassion and Justice.

"We launched our inclusion and diversity plan last year," she adds. "It outlines our commitment to a more inclusive and diverse aged care service for our staff and clients. We are providing training opportunities for our staff, while our service agreements are available in a range of languages for our clients. We are in the process of having our service booklet translated as well."

Exercise for the brain

Sharing language helps people build connections with others. It allows people to understand and appreciate different cultures and perspectives. Research suggests that learning new words in a different language as an older person can decrease the risk of developing dementia.

Many of you would be familiar with the greeting Namaste (Na-ma-stay). It is a way to show respect and humility when greeting someone, similar to saying "hello" or "goodbye" in English. Here are a couple more Nepali phrases to learn:

Thank you Dhanyabad

(dhan-ya-baa-d)

How are you? K Cha?

Is everything okay? Thik cha?

Thik cha. I'm okay

Sharing food

Sharing food brings generations and cultures together.

Dumplings are a popular dish in many cultures, including Chinese, Japanese, Korean and Nepalese. They can be made with a variety of fillings, including meat, seafood, and vegetables, and can be steamed, boiled, or fried. Bitesize, they are easy to eat and digest.

Ask your worker if they can help you shop for the ingredients and show you how to cook them at home. Afterwards, you can say Mi - tho - cha - "it's delicious"!

New activities spark interest

Anglicare is trialling a resource kit that has the potential to improve life for the older Tasmanians we support.

The trial is being led by southern-based Home Care Worker, Cheryl Hastie (pictured far right.) Cheryl is enjoying the opportunity to 'road test' some new activities with the people she supports.

Cheryl's clients are enjoying the project, too. Lester and Marlene kindly gave us permission to share their experiences and photos.

Marlene enjoys her regular pampering routine with Cheryl. She has her nails done, her hands massaged and her hair blow-dried. "She loves what she sees in the mirror!" says Cheryl.

Marlene found a new colouring-in activity very engaging and enjoyed chatting about the subject matter and colour choices.

"Marlene reads well so I think that reading and listening to audio-books together could also work for her," Cheryl said.

Lester lives in a supported accommodation complex in Hobart. New residents are shown his unit so that they know the standard of care to aim for.

Lester looks forward to his Anglicare service. Often he and Cheryl cook together from simple packet mix recipes. He loves sharing the results with fellow residents.

"Lester is a superstar," says Cheryl. "His friend James says everyone needs to have a Lester in their life. I think he's right!"

Cheryl introduced noughts and crosses, building blocks, ball-throwing and bubbles to Lester's session and he enjoyed them all. Again the colouring-in was a clear winner: "He got his pictures laminated at reception and put them up on the wall alongside art that other residents have given him," she said.

What's next?

Once the resource kit is finalised, it will be turned into a special backpack that sits in workers' cars so that it's always on hand.

The activities are particularly beneficial for people with dementia, but they can be used and enjoyed by anyone looking for a new and engaging activity to do during their support session.

The trial is part of a wider project across Anglicare that responds to client feedback about things that would improve their quality of life.

Hear ye, hear ye

We can support you to keep your ears healthy and your hearing at its best.

According to Hearing Australia, untreated hearing loss is linked to health conditions including depression, anxiety, diabetes and heart disease.

Research shows that it can also increase the risk of developing dementia by up to five times - and the greater the hearing loss, the greater the risk.

It's thought that a person's brain becomes over-worked if it has to struggle to make sense of the sounds received in their ears. Hearing aids make it easier to process the information we need.

Clinical Lead Miranda Wynwood says Anglicare understands the importance of early detection and treatment.

"It will help you to stay balanced, strong and active, make it easier to communicate with your family members and live life to the fullest," she says. "Our team members are trained to spot the signs of hearing loss. Each year they take a refresher training course on how to maintain and fit a hearing aid correctly and replace its batteries. We can help you keep your ears clean so that your hearing aid can work properly. We can also support you to attend regular hearing checks."

What are the symptoms of hearing loss?*

The first signs of hearing loss can be hard to notice because they usually come on gradually. They might include:

- having trouble hearing in noisy places
- having trouble hearing people on the phone or if they're not facing you
- often asking people to repeat themselves
- hearing sounds as muffled, as though people are mumbling
- needing to have the TV up louder than other people
- often missing your phone or the doorbell ringing
- hearing buzzing or ringing in your ears
- avoiding situations because you have trouble hearing.

The Hearing Australia website includes stories of everyday Australians and their journeys to healthy hearing. Head to hearing.com.au to find out more and please talk to your care manager if you have any concerns about your hearing.

Kevin's kindness

Kevin Archie of Montello recently turned 95. For the past 30 years he has knitted rainbow-coloured beanies and sent them overseas for children in need.

Kevin was 'number 6' in a dairy farming family with 10 children. He grew up at Gunns Plains and Upper Natone and after that, King Island.

"My mother was kept very busy," he recalls. "She always had a pair of knitting needles in her hands and knitted many pairs of socks. When I was six years old she encouraged me to give it a try. I learned using four-inch nails because we didn't have any spare needles."

I'd encourage anyone to take it up. It's a good pastime, especially as you get older. I get a lot of pleasure out of it.

Kevin Archie

Kevin graduated to proper needles and his first project was a pair of socks without a heel.

His skills quickly developed and over the years he made many jumpers, often using wool that he had dyed and spun himself. There's one that he particularly treasures that is knitted with alpaca wool.

"When I first started the beanies I had a target of 100 a year and I made it, but now I'm slowing down a bit," said Kevin. "It's something I do in between watching television and playing on my iPad.

Kevin Archie hopes that his story might inspire readers to take up or rediscover knitting, and use their hobby for good.

"I'd encourage anyone to take it up. It's a good pastime, especially as you get older. I get a lot of pleasure out of it."

Kevin says that getting out and about "keeps him going." Anglicare supports him to make twice-weekly trips to the Burnie Senior Citizens Club and Burnie Community House. He likes to play Crib and Five Hundred there with friends and once a month they come to his house for an extra session.

He's been promised "a humdinger of a party" by the team at the Community House to mark his 95th and he's looking forward to it very much.

At the age of 12 and living in Melbourne, she persuaded her mother to sign her up to a commercial art course by mail. The certificate she received gave her valuable experience and motivation.

Lorraine took up art again when she moved to Tasmania 46 years ago.

"I enrolled in an art class in Burnie and quickly realised how little I knew," she said.

Over the years she has worked with oils and acrylics and dabbled in collage. The two drawings pictured above featured in the 2023 Anglicare calendar. "Pen and ink drawing is what I love most. It's very technical and precise. I lose myself in it," she says.

A member of the Burnie Coastal Art Group, Lorraine enjoys sharing her work with others.

"I sold my first work 40 years ago, an oil painting that featured big, bright flowers. Just before Christmas I sold a piece at the Wonders of Wynyard gallery. The price put on it was $100 more than it should have been but it still sold!"

Lorraine's eyesight means that she can no longer do detailed drawings: "I'd love to return to oils. Acrylics would be easier - but I've never been a splasher!" she says.

Lorraine has received a service from Anglicare for around nine years. Her Home Care Package has been recently upgraded to a Level 3 and she says she's looking forward to getting out and about a bit more.

"I would like to spend more time near the sea it's good for the mind and the soul," she says.

Career moves

Three members of our cleaning team have moved into new roles as part of a workforce development project.

Congratulations to Renae, Cheryl and Rebecca for graduating with a Certificate III in Individual Support (Ageing) late last year. They are now fully qualified Home Care Workers.

The qualification was offered by Anglicare to provide a professional development opportunity for our team and to cater for increasing demand for our in-home services.

The course, completed by the trio over nine months, included a 120-hour work placement that was coordinated by Anglicare. Thank you to those of you who welcomed our trainees into your homes during this time.

Another nine team members are currently studying this qualification, and we look forward to their graduation later this year.

I now have a better understanding of our role in the community setting ...

'A blessed gift of hope and love'

We had a fantastic response to our Christmas Appeal.

St. Georges Church was one of the generous donors to our Christmas Appeal. Amy Maskell from St Georges is pictured here with Customer Service Centre Assistant Nikolas Long.

Thank you to everyone who helped us support Tasmanians during the festive season and into the New Year.

More than 10 Anglican parishes, students from three Anglican schools and a handful of businesses donated a huge number of bags filled to the brim with festive food and practical gifts. We used these items to create more than 200 hampers that were distributed to clients in need around the State.

We were also very grateful to be one of 11 charities chosen by the ABC Giving Tree Appeal. We provided 140 families with store vouchers that could be used for Christmas and/or equipping children with essentials required for the new school year.

Every Tasmanian matters

Anglicare has a new campaign on television and radio that shares the message 'Anglicare - because every Tasmanian matters'.

The ads feature stories that highlight aged care, financial counselling and our Social Action and Research Centre (SARC). You can watch them on Southern Cross (including 7Mate and 7Two).

The campaign builds on people's understanding of Anglicare's work and the strong values that guide us.

Our research and advocacy arm, SARC, sets us apart from other service providers. This year the team will focus on supporting the Government's gambling reforms and shining a spotlight on housing issues and financial literacy, including the impact of Buy Now Pay Later products. Go to the SARC page on the Anglicare website to find out more.
